WATERY SENTIMENTALITY. Christianity is not a sentiment; it is a fact. It would be a greater fact were it not for the prevailence of that lasy notion not for the prevalence of that may bollon that it has no right to be aggressive. Why not aggressive? Men fight for money, but say that it is "religious intolerance" to fight for Christ. Men fight and satisfy their passions, amite the neighbor that insults them, pursue the scoundrel that robs, hang the wretch that murders, de fend their "homes and firesides" by kill ing their neighbors, but yet say that it i ing their neighbors, but yet say that it is a huge crime to fight, to hang, to kill in detense of religion. Our toleration is taking the shape of cowardice. A huge war is not yet quite over in France, in which half a million of Christian brethren perished. It was waged for a worldly idea, nothing more. No one pretends to see any crime in that it is a matter of course, for wanin that, it is a matter of course, for man-kind are now used to being butchered for
